Discuss this cv

Joseph Kenneth Hunt is called "Ken" partly because his father is called Joe. Had Ken been called Joe, he'd have been nicknamed "Little Joey" (which is a baby roo).
In fact it turns out that his father's name is not Joe but Percy - Percy Joseph Kelly Hunt - and he was called Joe because his real name would also have made his younger days intolerable. It further transpires that Kelly is not the family name. Joe's father was press-ganged by the Royal Navy, jumped ship in Portsmouth and assumed the name Kelly.
Ken has led a varied life. He managed a dodgem track, picked fruit, spent time as a messenger boy, a painter, an accountant and a business consultant, and also owned a general store.
A rover at heart, he has travelled widely in Europe, Canada, America, China, Russia, Asia and big-time islands like Jersey, Guernsey, the Isle of Man, Grand Cayman and the Bahamas. He claims the fact that the latter are all tax havens has made no difference whatsoever to his appreciation of them.

Western Australians: "sand-gropers".

People from New South Wales, seen from Queenslander's perspective: "Mexicans".

Queensland: "banana benders".

There is a class system, but this is based on character, not so much the family tree, income or to what school you went.

Aussie attitude: If you inherit a fortune, you're lucky. If you're making a fortune, you're a fraudster. If you're winning a fortune, you're a hero.

Tasmanians through the lens of main islanders: "Taswegians".

Slang: What Aussies call other Aussies - Australian Geographic

From Convicts to Banana-benders, Aussies even have slags for each other. AUSSIES LOVE to call each other names (gender-ot some funky, and tell you that Acca-Dacca are fair-dinkum bonzi. They also love their slang. A little known fact, is that Aussies & Australians have slags for each other... It was

Mapping Leadership Cultures

Attitudes toward decision making can range along a continuum from strongly top-down to strongly consensual; attitudes toward authority can vary from extremely egalitarian to extremely hierarchical. The positions for the 19 countries shown on this map were determined from interviews conducted between 2003 and 2016.

At a barbecue, Aron and Jens meet for the first time. They immediately get into conversation. At the end of the party, Aron says: "I'll call you!" Two weeks later, Jens angrily calls Aron because he still hasn't been in touch.

- Important: The friendly behaviour shown at the beginning does not necessarily mean closeness or friendship. It simply means friendliness, and may later turn out to be nothing more than a short-lived acquaintance. "I'll call you" is not a promise, but – similar to certain vague invitations – merely an expression of goodwill. The famous phrase "How are you?" is not a real question about how you are doing, but simply a greeting. After all, you also don't start praying when someone in southern Germany greets you with "Grüß Gott."

Enjoy the attention you receive as a newcomer, but don't mistake it for friendship.
Caution: Bringing up political topics in small talk is taboo! In fact, in small talk you should avoid anything that risks disturbing the pleasant atmosphere.

One Reason Cross-Cultural Small Talk Is So Tricky

It was my first dinner party in France and I was chatting with a Parisian couple. All was well until I asked what I thought was a perfectly innocent question: "How did the two of you meet?" My husband Eric (who is French) shot me a look of horror. When we got home he explained: "We don't ask that Drawing see page 186 in the book to the right.

"Friedemann Schulz von Thun's Value and Development Square is a communication model. The premise is that every value (every virtue, every leading principle, every human attribute) has a constructive effect only in connection with a positive contrasting value, a "sister-virtue". Without this balance, a value is easily devalued to an exaggeration of itself.
Thriftiness is a positive attribute, stinginess is not. You need a bit of generosity to balance stinginess, and a bit of thriftiness to avoid extravagance, always depending on your point of view."
